Document # 1781-04-05-02 – 13-year-old Carlota, Sets Fire to Her Enslaver's House

K4BL Abstract:

In April 1781, 13-year old Carlota (listed as negra, negrita, and native de Senegal), is being tried in the presence of a court-appointed guardian for having attempted to set fire to her enslaver's house. Her enslaver, Francisco Brantan, is a 50-year-old negro libre. Testimony given by several other free and enslaved negros, and white criollos, contradicts Carlota's version of events. Carlota is jailed for more than two months before the judge deems her guilty; another month passes before he orders Carlota to undergo 50 lashes in the public square. In its current stage, this document is truncated; a more complete version is currently in progress. Additionally, it is part of a series of documents related to the fire, or potentially multiple fires, which were set at the homes of enslavers in April of 1781. This case, and Carlota's testimony, provides insight into the complex legal landscape of colonial Louisiana. It also raises questions about how testimony given by children, and especially enslaved children, was received by the courts during the colonial period.

In the City of New Orleans on April 5th of 1781:

Don Guido Dufosat, Alcalde ordinario de segundo voto¹ of this City and its jurisdiction by His Majesty: states that now, at around eight-thirty at night, he has just been informed by order of Francisco Brantan that while he was in the courtyard of their home at said hour he was approached by a negrita escalva named Carlota, aged thirteen: telling him, 'my master, look, first, I just set fire to the courtyard by request of some negros,' and immediately going to the place she pointed out to him, he found below a portion of wooden planks that were leaning against the cellar of said houses an extinguished charcoal wrapped in a cloth and this was not burned That charcoal and piece of cloth said Francisco handed over to Your Grace, by virtue of which he ordered the &lt;sup>1</sup> The term alcade ordinario refers to judges who tried non-fuero [non-military] cases and who sat in an elected judicial post on the New Orleans Cabildo council. Only 'able and informed' men were considered eligible for this post. In order to serve as an alcade ordinario, the judge was required to have a residence in the city and to live there during their tenure of office. The New Orleans Cabildo had two such alcaldes ordinarios, who were designated as alcalde ordinario deprimer voto and alcalde ordinario de segundo voto, respectively. They were voting members of the council. Their judicial responsibilities, however, made it impossible for them to serve as comisario anual or comisario mensual. In the absence of the governor and his lieutenant, the alcalde ordinario de primer voto presided over the Cabildo sessions. The alcaldes ordinarios were not salaried, and they collected set fees from the cases they heard in their respective courts. For more see Gilbert C. Din and John E. Harkins, The New Orleans Cabildo: Colonial Louisiana's First City Government, 1769-1803. Baton Rouge: Louisiana State University Press (1996).

In the city of New Orleans the sixth of April of 1781, while in the public jail, His Grace made appear before him the young negrita named Carlota, in the presence of Fernando Rodriguez, her guardian, and before me, the present notary, His Grace received the oath in accordance with the law which was made by God our Lord with a sign of the cross under which she promised to tell the truth, and examined according to the tenor of principal decree, she said the following

Asked what motive she had to set fire under a portion of thatched wood that was leaning against the warehouse of her amo Francisco Brantan

[f. 5r] [digital 10]

She said that, having been persuaded by the mulata libre named Juaneton who had belonged to Don Juan La Cour, also known as Dubourg, she set the fire, but regretting the harm that could result from said fire, she called her amo, and told him to remove it, showing him where it was, and her amo then came, and removed the charcoal which had not yet burned the cloth it was wrapped in and she responds

Asked if the said mulata promised her anything, or, a reward to induce her to commit
